This study aimed to develop a comprehensive picture of how children and young people experience consent processes in acute care hospitals. The study also aimed to explore how nurses account for the rights of children and young people in these environments. Theory, literature and direct observation were used to inform the design of three studies, using a descriptive qualitative design. Data were collected from the clinical environment and relevant literature. Interviews with children and young people, interviews and focus groups with nurses, and a review of relevant literature were used to develop a comprehensive picture of consent processes. The research identified three themes which were clearly linked to the patient's situation: preventing harm; balancing risk and potential benefit; and supporting children in the decision-making process. Registered nurses also described their role in enabling children and young people to make their own decisions about consent in the critical care environment. Issues identified included children and young people's wish to make their own decisions, and the pressures this placed on nurses, who lacked a clear role in decision-making. Children and young people may be less likely to consider their capacity when a decision needs to be made which may influence their need for consent in practice. Nurses face significant challenges in communicating with these young people and in supporting them in making decisions.Ministries The Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) is a pioneer of the “new spirituality” movement. We seek to advance God’s Kingdom through our efforts in evangelism, discipleship and service to the world. Responsible Living At Christ for the Nations we encourage men and women to place a high value on their personal health and well being. Because of our specific mission, we stress the involvement of the whole family in the health of the body. Worship As the center of our community, Christ for the Nations strives to reach new people for Christ through our weekly services and Bible Study. We have faith that the power of the Gospel can bring about change in lives and in the world.2000 Grand Prix de Tennis de Lyon The 2000 Grand Prix de Tennis de Lyon was a men's tennis tournament played on indoor hard courts in Lyon, France, and was part of the International Series of the 2000 ATP Tour.
